

DETROIT FREE PRESS

July 22, 2010

Eric Coleman is a longtime county commissioner who says the state needs to find ways to bolster K-12 education funding and adopt two- or three-year budgets to bring more stability to government. As one of the first, and longest serving, African-American elected officials in Oakland County government, he has a formidable record of barrier-breaking and bridge-building.